

Bio:
Dr. Lilian Peake

Dr. Lilian Peake has served as a public health director for the Virginia Department of Health since 2003, first in the Culpeper area and currently in Charlottesville. In this role she provides technical expertise to the healthcare community, local officials, community organizations, and the public on public health subjects, including community health assessment, communicable disease control, maternal and child health, and environmental health. Dr. Peake oversees the management and medical direction of the health district's five local health departments. She is an adjunct faculty member of the Department of Public Health Sciences at the University Of Virginia School Of Medicine and has published articles on public health topics ranging from asthma to vaccine virus infection. Dr. Peake received her medical degree from the University Of Virginia School Of Medicine and a Master's degree in Public Health from the Johns Hopkins University.

Thomas Jefferson Health District of the Virginia Department of Health:

Provides public health services, including communicable disease prevention and control, preventive health services, and environmental health services, to the residents of the City of Charlottesville and the counties of Albemarle, Fluvanna, Greene, Louisa and Nelson.